Along with energetic ultraviolet radiation and heat from the Sun, solar flares can cause a variety of effects on Earth. One of the most well-known effects is the aurora borealis, also known as the Northern Lights. Solar flares can also cause radio blackouts, which can affect communication and navigation systems. In addition, solar flares can cause power outages and damage to satellites. The impact of solar flares on Earth is a complex and ongoing area of research.

his upper atmosphere can temporarily disrupt radio waves on the surface of the Earth. This is because solar flares can cause a temporary increase in the density of the ionosphere, which can block radio waves from passing through. This can affect communication and navigation systems, particularly those that rely on radio waves. The impact of solar flares on the ionosphere is a complex and ongoing area of research.
