In essence, the objective of the game is for two teams to play against each other in 5 rounds of best-of-five limited. Each "round" comes with a certain objective to be achieved by both sides, where one team, the Terrorists, tries to complete a specific objective, such as planting a bomb, while the other team, the Counter-Terrorists, tries to prevent that bomb from being planted or to defuse the bomb if it is planted successfully. At the end of each round, the losing team is eliminated and the survivors of the winning team receive virtual money, which they can use to purchase more advanced equipment in the next round.

Economy of the Game

One of the crucial aspects of the game is its virtual economy. In each round, the winning team earns or loses virtual money, which is used to buy weapons and equipment for the next round. This mechanism of earning and spending efficiently adds more depth to the game's strategy.
